

BRITISH GRIP ON INDIANS THREATENED

their multitudes and the Welsh troops are not fully trusted.

Mahatma Gandhi has revealed to the use of force, but he has not with his movement is the agitation which the Germans started even before the great war and which has been continued since the war by the Bolsheviks and Mohammedans, working together. Gandhi has brought the people of the country together, but it is a question whether the organization, in the end, will not be seized by the forces of "action."

New Head Leader of India.

For the present, however, Gandhi is the real leader of India. In the national congress which met in Calcutta in September, the 400 delegates showed overwhelming support that they were ready to follow his lead because the people believed in him. When the text comes on the proposal no longer to cooperate with the British government the vote was 184 to 84, and the majority would have been much larger except that many delegates, finding the result was a foregone conclusion, did not feel it was necessary to remain until the end of the six-day session. Ten of the 12 provinces stood with him and one of the opposing provinces was Burma, which can hardly be called part of India proper. The Mohammedan associations, meeting at the same time, backed him unanimously.

Thus all of India was committed to one of the most remarkable programs ever devised. Its chief points are:

Surrender of titles and offices and refusal to attend government functions.

Withdrawal of children from the government schools and substitution of national educational institutions.

Boycott of the courts of the British and establishment of private tribunals, as in Ireland.

Refusal to volunteer for army service in Mesopotamia.

Withdrawal of all candidates under the new British scheme for limited parliamentary government and refusal to vote in elections.

Boycott of foreign goods and restoration of home industries.

His Doctrine of Soul Force.

Gandhi laid a strong foundation for years of service for the loyalty to him of the Indians. This certainty came 24 years ago, when a cry went up from the Indians who had been turned to South Africa by the white settlers and had been treated as a class of practical slaves. He went there to fight their battle, stood up under such attacks and finally won the system of non-violent resistance which he has now taught to all India. He called it the doctrine of "Soul Force" and this is how he once described it.

The root meaning is holding on to the truth, hence truth-force. I have also called it love force or soul force. I discovered in the earliest stages of the pursuit of the truth did not mean the pursuit of violence, being inflicted on one's opponent, but that he must be weaned of error by patience and sympathy. Patience means self-suffering; so the doctrine came to mean vindication of the truth, not by infliction of suffering on the opponent, but on one's own self.

He thus laid his philosophy ready when the great crisis came in India following the British decision to suppress the movements of self-determination of peoples and liberty which had been so emphasized in the propaganda of the British. Finally, the British government was about to take Christian powers were about to take over the dominion were deeply alarmed by the fact that the western world was about to take over the dominion of Turkey and Persia, the strongholds of the faith.

Mr. Michael O'Dwyer, governor-general of the Punjab, and other imperial officials became alarmed at the evidence of unrest. It was decided that if the agitation were suppressed, the people would become quiet. Judge Bowland, an eminent British jurist, took counsel with the authorities and drew up the remarkable set of laws which were proclaimed early in 1919. They gave to the authorities the right to arrest without warrant, to search without trial, to hold secret trials without counsel or confronting the accused with witnesses, and other such powers.

Gandhi preached the "Hartal." Against these laws Gandhi invited from all over India to India to the other. Although he was a Hindu he was acclaimed by the people of all the different races and religions. He preached his doctrine of "Soul Force" and advised the use of the "Hartal," a form of general strike known for some time in the land. This it came about that in the latter days of March, 1919, and the early days of April, the British authorities in India, and particularly in the Punjab, were suddenly confronted with something they had never seen before—a demonstration of the complete solidarity of the people of the land. In great cities the whole population ceased all work on orders given overnight.

Mr. Michael O'Dwyer, a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, one of the British rulers, and decided to know what was behind the demonstration.

"To my mind," returned Gandhi, "it was due to the soul force of Mr. Gandhi."

Then the American Message.

The force of which Mr. Michael O'Dwyer spoke, the power of the British empire was used. Gen. Dyer was given authority to subdue the agitators. He accepted the advice of Gandhi. He followed the advice of Gandhi. One was held in a walled enclosure outside of Amritsar and upon it he turned the troops with rifles and knives until more than 200 of the persons attending had been killed or wounded.

Since then the "Soul Force" of Gandhi has been marching on to one victory after another. He was put in jail, but it was found too dangerous to keep him there. Gen. Dyer has been removed and disgraced by the government and the house of commons. Gandhi is still in the Punjab. Parliament has made concessions of a partial parliamentary system. Incentives have been held out to Gandhi to join with the government. But he has gone on organizing his forces until now he has the hundreds of millions almost solidly behind him.

One who has just returned from Ireland has told me what he saw at a hotel in Dublin. A member of the British military staff, a man who had light-headedly faced all the dangers of the battlefield, a dare-devil in tight places, would sit for hours chewing at his thumb or fingers. He had thus carefully torn away all the outer rind of thumb and fingers half way back.

If that is what the strain in Ireland will do to a brave British officer, what will it do in India?
